SUMMARY

INTRODUCTION

Homosexual love and sex, if practiced with a thorough understanding and appreciation of another person's needs, often transcend the satisfaction realized in other relationships when the total fulfillment of the individuals involved is the chief consideration. Two males, or three or more if that be the preference, have the unique and exclusive advantage of joining together in sexual unions which can yield pleasures of unparalleled proportions for both parties involved, rather than just one, as is so often the case in, for example, a heterosexual act.

The reason for this delightful phenomenon, albeit erroneously considered by some as a blunder of nature, is elementary: Physical features notwithstanding, two males are generally better able to satisfy one another if only because they can readily anticipate the needs and desires of their partner by relating to that which meets their own personal requirements. It is thus quite ordinary for a homosexual union to often begin with the aggressor attempting on his partner sexual acts which he expects to enjoy in return. The foundation for a union is therefore established and, from that point on, the common anatomy of the male bodies permits reciprocal acts and the attending, eventual, mutual satisfaction. Of course, there are exceptions, but in virtually all homosexual love and sex episodes, the primary motivation is based on the foregoing. And the objective is invariably twofold: The satisfaction and fulfillment of both the aggressor and the receiver.

In "Homosexual Love" the technicalities and clinical definitions of the male body, the genital organs, and explanations of their functions are not presented in detail. In preference, how they are most efficiently used in sex is brought forth in an easy-to-read and easy-to-understand presentation. The usual techniques applied in homosexual love and sex unions, along with descriptions of carrying them out to achieve the ultimate in enjoyment, are premium features of the writing.

When cruising, seek out someone who is physically attracted to you.

Both the novice and the practicing homosexual will find "Homosexual Love" to be of value. The novice will be rewarded with tips on how to meet a sex partner, the caution to be exercised in such meetings, and he will derive a wealth of information on what to do after his mate has been selected. The practicing homosexual, conversely, will appreciate and be enlightened by the review of techniques and variations thereon, and the need for him to experiment occasionally to ensure continual satisfaction.

SELECTING A PARTNER

In gay jargon, cruising is the most common reference to the search for a partner with whom one seeks to enjoy an association. The term has grown to have widespread meaning, taking in everything from a chance meeting, in which two strangers—both gay—are attracted to one another, to the efforts and methods employed in attempting to meet another individual whose presence in a gay environment, such as a bar, makes him an eligible candidate. Cruising, or "to meet," is thus the initial step when one sets out to select a partner in a homosexual relationship. And acquiring skill in the most productive cruising procedures is therefore important, a definite advantage.

Cruising can be accomplished by driving through the streets (of major cities) in a car, watching for hitchhikers; by visiting gay bars, on the lookout for someone who is physically attractive; by determining popular meeting places among members of the gay society, whether it be a shopping center, a park, or like location; or by walking along crowded main streets, watching for interesting glances from someone passing by. In effect, cruising can be done in almost any surroundings, but it must obviously be with care, especially in public places which do not necessarily cater to an all-gay clientele.

It is imperative that caution be exercised when cruising. Indeed, local laws do vary, depending on state and city laws, but even though a liberal police attitude may exist as a result of modernized legislation, it is unwise to appear obvious in public places. Although it may seem a logical choice, for example, a rest room in a public place and attempting to contact a patron using the facility is only asking for trouble. There is every possibility, every probability, that such a location is under police surveillance to protect the public; or, at best, a disinterested individual could be offended when approached and might react accordingly. The same applies in many other areas, and one should always apply discretion in his cruising activities.

One need not enter risky places. There are many ideal cruising sites, as indicated. Even a shopping center or main street can be popular. If one is on the lookout, he need only wait for a glance that signals interest, in which case, he simply stops to admire a display in a store window, to light a cigarette, or enter a store. If the passer-by approaches to stand close by and perhaps share the display in the store window, to ask for a light for his own cigarette, or follows into the store, he is an obvious candidate and a return glance and smile will often spur a greeting and conversation.

Establishments that cater to gay clientele are, however, the best choices for cruising. The security of knowing that everyone in attendance is eligible helps to relieve any apprehensions or tension. The procedure, of course, is one in which a physically attractive patron is singled out and an attempt to meet him becomes the objective. Two considerations should be noted:

First, "physically attractive" does not necessarily imply exceptionally handsome, beautiful, or young. The search for a partner should not be bogged down by efforts to meet only the youthful and beautiful. Quite often, a warm, lasting relationship will be the product of associating with one who is found to be attractive in other ways. His physical features should be satisfactory, pleasing to the one doing the cruising; he should have personality; he should project good personal hygiene, determined usually by the way he is dressed; and other related features should be the criteria upon which the partner is singled out.

Second, the most common error made in cruising, or at best the most common deficiency, is the reluctance among members of a gay environment to be at least somewhat aggressive. There's no denying that if one fails to attempt a meeting with someone he admires, the chances are that they will never make contact. One member of the pair has to act, and as it is said, "...there can be no harm in a smile and a friendly 'hello.' Customers in a gay bar, for example, with rare exception, seem to harbor a fear of being turned down if they approach a prospect. Apparent is their lack of confidence. These fears should be dismissed in favor of a "So what...the worst he can say is no!" attitude. In many cases, the prospect is actually eager to meet, or make contact, but he, too, is reluctant to make the first move. Thus two individuals who wanted to meet one another may never do so. It's always worth a try. Usually, if the prospect isn't interested, or cannot be at the time, he will be courteous in his denial, and in all probability will have a valid reason.

Once the eyes meet, and a few glances have been exchanged, along with a warm smile, one of the pair should approach the other to simply begin conversation. A simple "Hello," or "How are you?" is all that is necessary to get the meeting underway. From that point on, through discussion of likes and dislikes, and other topics of casual conversation, each has the opportunity to learn more about the personality traits of his new friend. If there is a mutual warmth or infatuation, the efforts of the cruising have proven successful and a new friend has been accomplished. If for some reason there is an apparent conflict, it is simply a matter of excusing one's self in a courteous manner.

Above all, one must try to overcome any lack of confidence and be tastefully aggressive. Case in point: Don works at a hamburger stand in a large shopping area. One day, Jim visited the shopping center and went to the hamburger stand to order a sandwich. Jim was attracted to Don, but because he didn't know him, and because dozens of people were standing by, it was an awkward situation at best. Jim wanted to meet Don, and welcomed the glances and smiles, but he avoided any conversation. For three days, Jim went to the hamburger stand where he was always greeted with a warm smile from Don. Finally, on the fourth day, Jim returned to the hamburger stand, armed with an envelope. When he placed his order, he handed the envelope to Don, with the comment, "Here're your tickets." Inside the envelope was a note, on which Jim had written his phone number, asking that Don phone him if he would care to get together. That night, Don did phone, and they arranged for a date.

Someone had to make the first move. In the foregoing case, Don could not, for he was in an area of employment, in a public place, and would run the risk of possible loss of employment had he, in fact, flirted with Jim. Had Jim not made some attempt to meet Don, the two might never have gotten together. As it turned out, the meeting was handled discreetly and a rewarding relationship was the end result.

Once the meeting has been accomplished, and it is determined that a partner has been selected, it is next necessary to arrive at a location for a more intimate relationship. Usually, one or the other has his own apartment, and the night can be spent together in the security of the private home.

However, any location is suitable for an intimate relationship, in which love and sex can be practiced. Take, for example, the case of Jon and Eddie, who met in a bar some distance from where they both lived. Time did not permit visiting one or the other's apartment, but Jon had a car, a feature of which was the vast area behind the front seats when the rear seat was folded down. The pair simply went out for a ride in Jon's car, selected a secluded spot, and enjoyed a warm love and sex session in the back of the car, parked at the side of a deserted road beneath a tree.

Thus, love and sex in a homosexual relationship can be performed in any secluded location, be it the privacy of a bedroom, a swimming pool, on the floor of the living room with soft carpeting beneath, in a car or boat, or under a tree in the comfort of a grassy cushion below.

In summary, cruising is just what the individual makes it. It is a definite talent with some, but a boring unproductive activity to others. Those more skillful at cruising invariably demonstrate a degree of aggressiveness. Failure to adopt this attitude will result in an individual falling into a common rut, standing in a gay bar where young stares at young, old glance at young, and young look at old...with no one attempting to initiate conversation. Not only is the reluctance to be aggressive a shameful waste of time, but it can also be depressing to the one who just stands around waiting for someone else to approach him.

Once the pair have arrived at their location, the impending union borders on being automatic. It is suggested that both move slowly to prolong the enjoyment of the relationship. Too often, once in an apartment, for example, both eagerly jump into bed, have sex, and the guest in the association leaves immediately after. Both have enjoyed the physical releases of the sexual union, but because they acted too anxiously, eager to satisfy their desires, the warmth of spending hours together in a relaxed atmosphere of close companionship has been lost. Of course, some do not seek the psychological satisfaction of togetherness and are on the lookout only for physical release. In which case a quick flop into bed and hasty climaxes are satisfactory.

Everyone reacts differently after meeting a partner for the night and joining together in the privacy of home. With some, there is a need for time to relax, to become adjusted to the surroundings. Usually, a cocktail or two will help, during which time a conversation will enable each other to learn to know their new partner better. Veterans of the activity probably will not demonstrate any inhibitions about being in a strange home or apartment, and the association is smooth and fast. On the other hand, it should always be remembered that some individuals prefer to become comfortable in strange surroundings before anything serious occurs.

And there are other exceptions. For example, the new friend who is embarking on a homosexual relationship and the attending sex acts for the first time. Extreme care should be exercised in this situation, and a wealth of patience is a prerequisite.

The entire head of the penis is taken into the mouth, where the tongue's performance involves swirling and licking.

Case History: Dan attended a gay bar for the first time, not knowing the "hows and whys" of cruising. Young and inhibited, he sat alone, not daring to speak to anyone if he were the one required to initiate the conversation. Fortunately, a pleasant, considerate young man, Rob, spotted Dan and attempted a conversation. Dan welcomed the opportunity to meet Rob, since he was physically attracted to him. They talked for a while, had a few drinks, and finally Rob suggested to Dan that they go to his apartment where they could be alone. Dan promptly agreed to the arrangement.

During the conversation, Rob detected that Dan was indeed a novice, and handled the boy accordingly. Once inside Rob's apartment, drinks were served and the two sat together, engaged only in casual conversation. Seated at the small bar in Rob's apartment afforded the opportunity for intimate discussions on gay life, tricking, and the rewards of companionship. Rob very carefully explained homosexual love to Dan, and ensured him that there was no need for fear.

Eventually, Rob stood at Dan's side where he put his arm around the boy and asked him if he'd care to "...get more comfortable." Anxious to learn more, Dan readily agreed, at which time Rob showed him into the bedroom. Once in the dim light and privacy of the bedroom, Rob helped Dan undress, but did so with care. He then undressed himself and both got into bed, where Rob patiently taught Dan all the basics in homosexual acts, demonstrating the manner in which they are accomplished.

Each situation requires special attention. He who visits a strange home or apartment after making contact with a partner for the night should definitely try to at least appear relaxed and "at home," if only to avoid the possibility of the host becoming uneasy or uncomfortable. Conversely, the host should exhibit a relaxed attitude and thus encourage the same feeling with his guest.

If there seem to be periods of awkwardness, particularly as the pair approach the time for a sexual union—just prior to going to bed, for example—and neither of the duo are aggressive, nature will usually take over to encourage the progress of the union. An embrace, a warm kiss, and a few sighs will often quickly do away with any apprehension that may exist. After all, in most cases, two people who have just met are total strangers, beyond the exchange of words in conversation, and it requires the development of a strong drive in the behalf of either or both individuals to consumate a relationship. But natural inclinations will usually prevail, bringing the two together. One brushing another while passing in a room will usually spur an embrace, the embrace will lead to a kiss, and the long-awaited union—the embrace and the kiss—will be responsible for warm sighs and affectionate touches. From that point on, it's automatic.

Once joined together in the security of a warm bed, when both individuals have managed to overcome any inhibitions, the fun begins. In the following chapters, methods of love and sex are reviewed, with the primary purpose being to achieve the ultimate in sexual sensations and satisfaction for both parties involved.

STIMULATION AND FOREPLAY

The excitement of being next to another bare body is usually sufficient to arouse and excite the drives of any normal male. The warmth, closeness, and intimacy of two nude bodies is an overwhelmingly pleasurable situation, but to derive the greatest pleasure out of the union, all avenues of further excitement should be pursued.

Kissing, obviously, is the initial phase. Once two people have endured a night of cruising, then patiently experienced the meeting, finally decided on a location, they find themselves in bed, free to do as they wish. In this relaxed atmosphere, the objective should be one of satisfying the partner and hopefully he, in turn, will attempt to do the same. To kiss is to begin.

The first kiss will undoubtedly be a long, passionate tongue kiss, or French kiss, which will encourage a firm embrace. In most cases, the first kiss will be responsible for bringing the two bodies closer together, with legs entwined and genital organs pressed firmly against each other's. The kiss enhances the tempo of excitement which encourages a firmer embrace, and that, in turn, will result in still more kisses, with wet tongues probing deeply into the partner's mouth, and lips nibbling ravenously on a penetrating tongue. Warm, wet kisses influence the excitement greatly, particularly when they are in combination with affectionate embracing and petting.

Kissing must not, of course, be restricted only to the lips. The most sensuous areas of the body will respond magnificently to the warmth of a kiss and a wet tongue. Among these areas are the breasts (which will usually become firm and erect during moments of sexual arousement in males), the ears and ear lobes, the neck, the area of the shoulders immediately below the neck, the abdomen, the upper groin, the inside and backside of the thighs, and even the feet and with some, the calves of the legs. And the genital organs, including the scrotum, or balls. The highest degree of excitement through kissing is aroused with kisses in the anal region, and the tongue probing the rectum will result in the epitome of the partner's sexual satisfaction, second only to the corona and head of his penis.

After the initial lips-to-lips kissing, your partner should preferably be on his back, affording you the opportunity to race your lips and tongue over the sensitive areas of his body. Stimulation kissing should be slow and delicate, yet not so delicate that it causes tickling in a very ticklish, or sensitive person. Gentle biting, or nibbling, should accompany the kiss, particularly in areas such as the breasts (being very careful not to bite hard and thus be harmful), the smooth buttocks, and the ear lobes. And sucking, too, adds to the enjoyment, particularly on the breasts and the inside of the ears.

Once the upper region of the body has been smothered in kisses, the partner will undoubtedly encourage more exploration, with particular desire to the most tender, sensitive zones, such as the rectum. If the partner remains on his back, it is simply a matter of moving head and mouth to his groin, lift gently on his buttocks to signal him to raise up, and be in a position which will allow him to rest his legs on your shoulders, thus raising and exposing his rectum.

Here, the most effective kissing can be accomplished making careful use of the tongue in the crevice between the buttocks, eventually probing the rectum with a wet, wiggling tongue. Here, too, kisses should be concentrated on the rearmost second section of the penis—the area between the scrotum and rectum. If the partner has a hard-on, the rear of the penis beneath the surface of the skin between the scrotum and rectum will also be firm, and sensitive to nibbling and kissing.

The kiss should eventually progress to the scrotum which will be taught if the partner has an erection. Common practice is to fondle the testicles with lips and tongue.

Petting contributes generously to the excitement generated by kissing. A warm, sweaty palm exploring one's body can only increase the buildup of excitement, and as with kissing, there are no boundaries to restrict petting activity. The hands should be used delicately, passed over the most sensuous portions of the body. Further excitement can be induced with the hands if they are properly used. They should be applied to the breasts, the thighs, the calves, the feet, the buttocks, all components of the genital organs, and the abdomen and groin to achieve the most pleasurable arousement.

Most important is the use of the hands at the back, in a form of massage, and the head and hair. There is no more comforting feeling than that of a firm hand gently caressing the back and spine, dropping down to grip the loose flesh of the buttocks, then being raised to pet, with lively fingers, the hair of the partner's head. These soothing motions augment the sexual excitement, particularly when in conjunction with passionate kissing.

The fingers, collectively and individually, are important tools. A wiggling finger deep in the partner's rectum is sure to thrill him during the period of stimulation. To further enhance the sensation of rectal exploration, the index finger should be used, inserted gently, and after the motions inside, slid in and out in an intercourse fashion. And busy fingers fondling the scrotum has a teasing effect on the overall excitement.

Kissing and petting are thus the first phases of the sexual union, intended to arouse both partners involved in the relationship. From this point on, both the kissing and petting become at best more refined, more important. After the body has been totally covered with kisses, including the anal opening of the rectum, the penis-the erection-becomes the object of attention for the mouth and the hands. And it is here that variety in use will help to prolong the sensations of the love act. Here, too, we will learn that individual preferences vary greatly.

Different methods of masturbation should preface discussions on oral-genital stimulation techniques and the various methods commonly applied. Self masturbation is accomplished in a variety of ways, ranging from the use of fingers-only to the firm grip of the palm. Basically, there are 4 masturbation techniques: (1) Use of the fingers only, sliding a gentle fingertip grip the full length of the shaft, forcing the foreskin of the penis down over the head, or using moistened (lubricated with a petroleum jelly or saliva) fingertips over the bulblike head. (2) A full grip of the hand used to stroke the full length of the shaft, moving the surrounding flesh down over the head of the penis, or using the palm of the hand in this fashion. (3) Palm of the hand only, used to stroke the bottom side of the penis gently, but fast, with the palm massaged quickly over the head and the ridge of the head base. (4) The two-hand method, wherein one hand is used to gently fondle and massage the head, while the other strokes only the base of the penis.

Since preferences in masturbation vary, it stands, too, that oral foreplay of the penis will be most effective once the preferences of the partner are determined. Use of the tongue and lips in a pattern best described as teasing motions will yield the highest degree of excitement and satisfaction. The most critical area of the penis is the crown, or the ring at the base of the head. Thus, a swirling tongue on the head and surrounding the ridge at the base will have the most satisfying results for your partner.

The method usually applied is one in which the head of the penis is allowed to enter the mouth, where the tongue is used in a swirling, licking motion, occasionally probing the opening in the head. Holding the erection with one hand, the mouth is draped over the head, and the tongue is used as the instrument to caress it. The tongue traveling the full length of the penis in its erect state is also very stimulating, and should be done intervittently, occasionally traveling back up to the head where it is allowed to linger and caress.

Although it is common for one partner to remain passive in oral-genital activity, the excitement is compounded dramatically if both members of the pair engage in the act. This is the familiar "69" position, in which the pair lay in opposite directions facing one another's genital region. Quite often, the simultaneous foreplay will be a preference with one or both of the partners in sex play.

For some unexplainable reason, the head of the penis on some individuals is far more sensitive than average, and oral genital sex exercises must thus be approached with care and patience. In these cases, the areas surrounding the penis—the surface of the groin beneath the naval, the scrotum, the rectum, and the uppermost portions of the thighs—should be the object of kissing and tongue exploration, with only the shaft of the erection receiving the occasional attention of the tongue.

Here, too, the hands play an important role. During the oral-genital sex exercises to further stimulation, using the tongue and lips vigorously, the hands should complement the act. While the head of the cock is being caressed with tongue and lips, the hands should continue petting other sensitive regions. Usually, one hand will be used to hold the erection at its base, while the other is free to explore the breasts once again, the abdomen and naval, and with emphasis on the buttocks and rectum. Reactions of the partner will usually dictate the favored regions of sensitivity. If, for example, he spreads his legs more widely apart, as the subject of oral attention to his genital region and during petting, it could indicate a preference either for increased rectal activity orally or with the hands, and it could also indicate a preference for attention to the insides and backs of the thighs.

Hands should be used to pet sensitive areas during fellatio.

Progressively, then, for review, the most common procedure is as follows:

Two partners lay nude in bed. The aggressor approaches the more passive of the pair and begins to kiss and pet. The passive partner will respond and reciprocate with passionate kisses and petting, pulling more closely to the aggressor as if seeking more excitement and stimulation. The aggressor then begins oral exploration of the passive partner's body, dropping his head down to the breasts where he nibbles longingly on the tips, occasionally reaching up to kiss and suck on the neck, directly beneath the arch of the shoulders.

When the aggressor moves to lower regions of the partner's body, to kiss and pet the more sensitive areas, he will usually be repositioned, allowing the partner to accomplish a degree of petting, paying attention to the aggressor's head, shoulders, back, buttocks, and rectum. If the aggressor becomes sufficiently stimulated, he will no doubt reposition himself to allow the more passive partner to duplicate the sex play simultaneously.

Oral-genital activity to enhance and prolong the excitement and stimulation of sex play should be heated no-holds-barred periods of warmth and closeness, with each partner allowing the other to perform virtually any act with mouth, tongue, lips, and hands.

FELLATIO

Fellatio is equal in popularity to anal intercourse among homosexual lovers to achieve a climax. There are some variations on techniques, but most will follow a general, basic pattern, employing occasional differences in approach and accomplishment of the act. Moisture and heat contribute most generously to the pleasure of fellatio, and thus anything done to encourage an increase in both will further stimulate the partner.

As an example on variation, the aggressor, prior to attempting fellatio on his partner, can take into his mouth a reasonably large mouth of hot water, hold it in the sides of his mouth until the penis has entered, then swath the head of the organ with his tongue and hot water during the act. Other variations include applying a petroleum jelly to the erection prior to fellatio, but in this writing we shall delve only into the fundamentals.

Fellatio is best defined as sucking, the pre-orgasm phase in a sex act. The aggressor in an act of fellatio must create within his mouth a strong sucking action which results in a high degree of tingling sensation on the head of the erection, supplementing the affects of warmth and moisture.

Positions of both individuals will vary, although there is a strong preference for the passive partner to lay on his back while the aggressor completes the act. But there are variations. (1) The recipient of the treat can be seated, on the edge of a bed, a chair, a bath tub, or any location which allows him to spread his legs wide apart, allowing his partner free access to the entire genital region. (2) The aggressor can lay on his back, and the recipient of the fellatio act straddles above him, allowing his penis to drop down directly into his partner's mouth, where he will gently apply intercourse motions during the sucking. This position is often used in simultaneous fellatio, where the recipient on top takes advantage of his partner's genitals and erection beneath his mouth. (3) The passive partner remains standing with the aggressor kneeled before him to achieve the proper mouth-to-organ height. (4) The aggressor can be seated, on the edge of a bed, for example, while his partner stands before him, with his penis at the proper height to allow entry into the mouth before it.

As indicated, fellatio means to suck. The procedure will generally follow the pre-orgasm oral-genital activities, during which only the head of the erection is the object of attention, licked and kissed to enhance the excitement. In the sucking act, a vacuum is created in the aggressor's mouth, his teeth are wrapped with the lips to avoid damage to the organ, and the lips, in turn, are wrapped tightly, or puckered, around the shaft as it enters the mouth. In all cases, the sucking should be strong, if only to add to the delight of the act.

Once the penis has entered the mouth and the vacuum is created, the aggressor moves his mouth up and down, back and forth over the shaft in pseudo-intercourse fashion. The recipient, in response, will move his lower torso in rhythm to the sucking motions. It is here that the position will depend largely on added participation: if the recipient is standing, the aggressor has the advantage of grasping his partner's buttocks to help control the motion of the penis in and out of his mouth.

During the sucking action, deep breaths of hot, exhaling air should be blown onto the organ intermittently, allowing not only a pause, or brief rest period for the aggressor, but adding to the sensation of the act on the part of the recipient.

The aggressor will detect signals of an impending climax. His partner's muscles will begin to tighten, the torso will be thrown forward in firmer lunges, sensitive areas of the body will quiver, legs will often stretch out, and some will emit deep groans and moans, even sobs. Immediately before the climax, the head of the penis will sometimes palpitate, or "bob," and the erection will grow to its hardest, largest position.

At this point in the act, the aggressor should tighten the grip of his lips on the shaft, increase the sucking volume, and work his head back and forth more quickly over the erection. As the partner begins to climax, the base of the penis will throb for a mere split second, then the semen will flow freely from the head of the organ, but in bursts. Initially, the climax will produce a large volume of sperm, during which time the partner will react with spasmodic jerks throughout his body. The peak of the climax is followed by a slowing of the sperm flow, in keeping with the lessened frequency of the throbbing at the base of the penis. Only a small amount of semen will be produced, and it is at this point that the head of the penis becomes extremely sensitive to touch, which explains the jerking and sometimes pulling away motion of the recipient if the aggressor continues to fondle the erection with his tongue after climax.

The orgasm can be enhanced by gentle massage of the scrotum just prior to climax, and by firmly massaging the area at the base of the penis, between the scrotum and the rectum. By firmly pressing the muscular region, which supports the hard-on, a larger amount of sperm can be encouraged, adding to the pleasure of the act and orgasm.

Further excitement can be generated by making use of the interior surfaces of the mouth, the sides of the cheeks, the roof, and back near the throat opening. This, of course, depends on the ability of an individual to relax, to avoid shortness or loss of breathing. The erection should be allowed to probe as deeply as possible into the mouth to enhance the stimulation. If the recipient can handle it, the head of the penis should be nestled at the throat opening, particularly during climax, if only in an inward and outward motion in the vacuum of sucking.

Once the semen has been released, the aggressor simply swallows it. There will be variations in taste, but for the most part it is a cross between tart and sweet. It has been said that the taste can be improved upon through regular dosages of wheat-germ oil, but the effects have not been established nor has any change in taste been proven.

The aforementioned variety of positions can be used to improve upon the excitement of the act. With the recipient seated, the aggressor approaches, on his knees, and has access to the entire genital region. During the time that he is sucking his hands can massage the abdomen, the thighs, legs, and even the feet. If support is available to the recipient, he can raise his legs, where they are wrapped around the aggressor's head or draped over his shoulders, in which case the rectum is exposed, allowing the aggressor access to the anal passage with his finger. This position also better exposes the scrotum and the testicles can be massaged during the act with ease of access.

Usually, however, the standard form has the recipient

Occasionally, head of erection should be fondled with tongue and lips; aggressor will often pause to "catch breath."

With recipient standing, aggressor has advantage of grasping buttocks to control motions of torso.

laying on his back, with the aggressor below, laying between his legs. In this prone position, the aggressor has more limited access to the rectal area, but his hands can be used in the upper regions of the torso for gentle massage, and down to the thighs and legs. It is in this position that a quick reversal will render a simultaneous, or "69," position. The aggressor need only to approach his partner from his abdomen down, with his own torso and genital region over the recipient's head. He then merely lowers his penis to the recipient's mouth, while taking in the upright erection before him.

It should be noted here that while the act is considered to be simultaneous, it is rare for both individuals to climax simultaneously. It is thus imperative for the first partner to continue his sucking, even though he has already climaxed, since the partner's orgasm has to be close, unless there is a vast difference in the time required between the two.

In the third position mentioned earlier, the recipient stands before the aggressor, who is in a kneeling position. Here, the aggressor has the advantage of controling the motions of his partner's torso by firmly gripping the buttocks and moving them back and forth in rhythm to his own sucking tempo. Also exposed is the rectum, which can be probed with a finger to enhance the excitement of an impending orgasm. Here, too, the back sides of the recipient's thighs are exposed and available for gentle, or firm, massage. And the scrotum hangs freely, accessible for fondling during the act.

In the fourth position, the aggressor is seated, and the recipient stands before him. This is attractive to the recipient who enjoys the opportunity to tighten and relax the muscles of his legs, sometimes standing on the tips of his toes, during the act. In his seated position, the aggressor will sometimes wrap his legs around the recipient's, adding to the support of his partner, particularly during climax, when his jerking, spasmodic reactions need to be moderately and gently confined.

One's inventiveness should be applied if some variety in fellatio is desired, and new positions represent a good springboard to still newer ideas.

Throughout this chapter, it has been assumed that pre-fellatio acts have produced sufficient warm-up for both partners and the attending erections. It should be noted that some, playing the aggressive role, prefer a flaccid penis at the outset of sucking. There is a degree of pleasure to be realized by these individuals who prefer the soft, flaccid cock in their mouth. If this is known, and if the recipient can control his erection, he can add to the pleasure of his partner by avoiding an erection for a prolonged period of time.

In this application, the aggressor apparently enjoys the sensation of the small organ, soft and rubbery in texture, in his mouth in its entirety. He ravenously sucks on the flesh and enjoys the sensation of it hardening within his mouth. He will also be the partner who, after climax, will delicately caress the flaccid penis after it has relaxed and his sucking could, of course, spur another erection to enhance his satisfaction.

Not to be ignored is the circumsized/non-circumsized consideration. Fellatio with the circumsized partner requires no special instructions. However, in the non-circumsized, the foreskin should be forced back, behind the ridge of the head of the penis if the erection itself hasn't accomplished full exposure of the head. If a generous amount of foreskin surrounds the penis, during sucking the aggressor can intermittently force his tongue beneath and around the flesh during the sucking act. In most cases, however, the flesh will be too tight for the tongue to enter to any degree, and a gentle probing at the fold beneath the flesh with the tip of the tongue will suffice.

For review, position notwithstanding, the erection is taken into the mouth, wrapped tightly with the lips and protected from the sharp edges of the teeth, a strong sucking is applied to the penis, and the organ is taken as deeply into the mouth as possible. A firm, well-paced back and forth motion of the head over the shaft, and occasional licking of the head with the tongue, will induce an orgasm. The impending orgasm is signaled by the reactions of the partner's body; his muscles tense and he increases the tempo of his own torso motions, usually pressing forward to encourage stronger sucking and faster stroking with the lips.

ANAL INTERCOURSE

Matched in popularity with fellatio, anal intercourse is simply defined as insertion of the erect penis into the recipient's rectal opening. Few, if any, variations can be applied, except for differences in positions. There are considerations, however; among them the need for the aggressor to be gentle, and the need to appreciate the recipient's desire for orgasm.

Following the pre-orgasm phases found in the preceding chapters, the pre-determined aggressor will increase his kissing and petting attention to the rectal area of the recipient, indicating his intentions. No matter the preferred position, the aggressor will simply encourage the recipient to move himself in preparation to accept the erection.

Prior to the insertion, the aggressor will usually caress the buttocks, rectal opening, lower back, and backs of his partner's thighs in a teasingly, tempting manner. To induce excitement, the aggressor usually probes the rectal opening with his tongue, spreading the cheeks of the buttocks wide. This not only increases the tempo of sensation, but aids in relaxing the recipient.

Following the pre-entry activities, a lubricant is applied both to the erection and the rectum for ease of insertion. A petroleum jelly or like substance will prove efficient. In a jam, even shampoo has been known to serve the purpose, and, of course, saliva, giving reason for the old saying, "Spit an' patience."

The recipient, if practiced in anal intercourse, will automatically prepare himself by relaxing prior to the entry. The aggressor should move with care, first allowing the head of his erection to probe the opening, then slowly moving forward to admit the remainder of the shaft. Once the opening has been pierced and spread to admit the head of the penis, the insertion can be hastened slightly, but consideration of the recipient dictates a need for slow, gentle motion to avoid pain.

Once the erection has been inserted, the aggressor slides it in and out, moving his torso back and forth, preferably for the full length of the shaft. The recipient, on the other hand, reciprocates and contributes to the activity through motions of his own torso, forcing it upward to allow full entry of the erection, and by flexing the muscles of the walls of the anus. The muscles should be relaxed and tightened intermittently during intercourse, but tightened firmly at the time of the partner's orgasm. The recipient should also develop a technique wherein he is able to move his buttocks in a rolling motion against the aggressor's groin and thighs to enhance the sensation.

As the time of orgasm approaches, the aggressor will demonstrate the usual pre-climax signals: Heavy breathing, faster movement of his torso and the attending hastened tempo of his erection sliding in and out, and he will invariably lunge forward with force immediately before and during orgasm. At this point, the recipient in the act must make the best use of all his facilities, for it is his performance, which depends largely on experience, that contributes most to the satisfactory completion and most rewarding sensations for his partner. As the aggressor indicates an orgasm, the recipient must concentrate on moving his buttocks upward and outward to enable the insertion of the erection to its fullest, and the activity of the anal muscles, tightly gripped on the shaft are important. The recipient's torso should move up and down (in a rolling motion) in rhythm to the aggressor's movements.

During orgasm, the recipient should continue his rectal activities, increasing the intensity of his actions, as if the intent were to draw out as much semen as possible, which is, of course, the objective, if the recipient hopes to satisfy fully the aggressor, his partner in the act.

The post-orgasm moments are to be relished, too. Often the recipient will not have been totally satisfied and will prefer that the penis remain inserted, during which time he will only savor the sensation, or will attempt his own orgasm, if it hasn't occurred during intercourse, as is so often the case. Here, the aggressor, with penis still inserted in his partner's rectum, can masturbate him, or withdraw and practice fellatio as a reciprocal act.

Some will prefer that the penis remain inserted, and in a continuation of the intercourse movements, on the premise that the activity will spur an orgasm for him, the result of the shaft moving inside him.

Care should also be exercised by the aggressor when removing his erection, particularly if it is still in an enlarged, hard state. The removal should be slow and gentle, just as the insertion, to avoid any discomfort to the partner. Popping it out too quickly can result in pain.

Following anal intercourse, personal hygiene dictates that the aggressor: (1) Urinate to remove any collection of waste and bacteria that could have accumulated in his urethra; and (2) Wash off the external areas of his penis with soap and water. Hopefully, the recipient has had experience and will have flushed out the anal passage prior to intercourse. This can be accomplished through the use of a simple hot water bag and douche attachment. If he is concerned with personal hygiene and that of his partner, he will also use a douche preparation, available at drug counters. A douche following intercourse is also recommended to remove any accumulation of bacteria.

Positions for anal intercourse include, but are not restricted to: (1) The recipient laying face down; (2) The recipient face down, but with buttocks raised high, supported by his knees; (3) The recipient laying on his back, with buttocks raised high and legs draped over the shoulders of the aggressor; (4) The recipient laying over the edge of a bed or couch; (5) The aggressor laying on his back so that the recipient can sit on his erection; (6) or the recipient on his side with the aggressor doing likewise behind, facing him.

The most common position is that of the recipient laying on his stomach, face down, and the aggressor over him. In this case, the aggressor simply kneels between the legs of his partner, spreading the legs wide apart. He then moves his erection in slowly from a semi-upright position, and lays on the back of his partner as the shaft enters the opening deeply. In this arrangement, the recipient can make the best use of his own lower torso to enhance the stimulating affects of the movement of muscles in the anal area. Some in the prone position, will wrap their legs tightly around the back of the aggressor's after the insertion has been completed, used to encourage deeper entry of the penis into their rectum.

Often, with the recipient in the prone position, an orgasm will occur as the result of the motions and their affect on his own erection against the surface of a bed or carpet, and his own lower abdomen. In this case simultaneous orgasms can be accomplished, although the common climax should not be an objective of the union if a delay by one of the partner's will hamper the overall act.

In position identified as No. 2 in the forgoing text, in which the recipient lays face down but with buttocks raised high, supported by the knees, the aggressor will usually remain on his knees to accomplish intercourse. The method is the same, but this arrangement allows the aggressor to perhaps masturbate his partner, since the recipient's erection is well exposed and accessibility is not limited by a body against a bed surface, for example.

Position No. 4 is preferred by those who enjoy continued kissing and other face-to-face activities not possible if the recipient is laying face down. Thus, the partner lays on his back with legs and buttocks raised high. The aggressor must have a sizable erection, for a greater length is required for this position, as compared to the face-down. As the aggressor moves forward to make the insertion, the recipient drapes his legs over his partner's shoulders, raising his buttocks still higher.

The lower torso motions remain the same, but as mentioned, once the penis is deep into the recipient's body, a close embrace is possible, and the aggressor is in a position to kiss and caress his partner's abdomen and breasts if his physical size permits. This arrangement also allows the aggressor a firm grip on his partner's buttocks and the sides of his thighs to pull the body closer.

To best expose the rectal area, the recipient can lay over the edge of a bed or couch, face down, with his buttocks just at the highest point outward. The aggressor can either stand, or kneel, depending on the height of the rectal opening. The deepest entry of the penis can be accomplished in this position, and again, there is an opportunity for the recipient to practice a variety of exercises and motions with his lower torso, along with the usual muscle activity of the anus.

Some recipients prefer complete control over the motions of intercourse, in which case the aggressor lays in a prone position, on his back, and the aggressor seats himself on the erection. The arrangement allows the recipient to position his rectum directly over the erection, then lowers his torso at his own speed as the penis is pushed inward. Once the organ is inserted, the up and down motions are in complete control of the receiver. He can judge an impending orgasm by the attitudes of his prone partner before him, and hasten the activity as he deems necessary for complete satisfaction.

For those who favor the pleasure, it is possible for the aggressor to simply reach forward to fondle his partner's erection which is directly over his abdomen. The masturbation of the partner can be controlled to coincide with his own feelings, and as he himself feels a climax approaching, he can hasten the masturbation strokes for a mutual orgasm. The recipient will, of course, climax by spurting the semen out onto the aggressor's abdomen and chest, adding to the pleasure of the simultaneous climax and overall union.

In the position identified as No. 6, the receiver and the aggressor lay on their side, and the union is consummated with ease, similar to the receiver being in a prone position, face down. With both individuals standing, a like situation results, wherein the genital region of the recipient is well exposed and available for masturbation and other activity.

It should be noted that there are variations on the foregoing positions. For example, with the receiver face down and his partner on his back with the erection fully inserted, the pair can roll over while remaining united. Thus the receiver is now laying back down on his partner, with the penis firmly inserted. In this position, kissing can be accomplished, the aggressor can kiss and nibble at his partner's ears, and the receiver's penis is well exposed, upright, so that he can masturbate himself or have his partner do so. Again, this is an arrangement which will allow mutual orgasm, since most of the control is administered by the recipient.

Removal of the penis after orgasm should be treated with the same care and patience as the insertion to avoid discomfort.

No matter the position, be it prone, standing, or sitting, the objective is to accomplish deep entry of the penis, for the aggressor will derive the greatest satisfaction at time of climax, and indeed the receiver will realize greater sensation as the internal genital organs are massaged by the invading shaft and its enlarged head. If the size of the inserted organ is great enough, the motions of it against the receiver's internal genital organs will be sufficient to induce orgasm, albeit without complete control.

Anal intercourse is considered by most to be the most pleasurable of sexual unions in homosexual love. If the preference of an individual is to play the part of an aggressor in anal intercourse, he must, of course, exercise some care in the selecting of his partner. Although it is not necessarily a hard and fast rule, the more femme appearing males are those most likely to have a preference for being the recipient, since their attitude will frequently relate to that of a female. Thus, when cruising and on the lookout for a receiver in the anal intercourse act, one can safely attempt to cruise the femme appearing individual.

However, once the thrills and satisfactions have been experienced as a receiver in anal intercourse, even the most butch appearing partners will seek out an aggressive partner whose preference is that of delivering in the union. In any event, desires and preferences, once in bed, should be discussed prior to the occasion, if at all possible. If not, one can only feel his way, in a manner of speaking, to determine his partner's wishes and probable reactions to advances.

Once the partner has been selected, and the direction of sexual union determined, nature will help to consummate the union and attending activities. In anal intercourse, with a stranger who hasn't indicated a preference, "nature's way" will be evident in motions of the body during pre-sex activities; the tendency to admire the aggressor's penis and its size; and in comments, such as "I want it," or "I want you to be a part of me," or even, "I want you in me."

Case History: Paul met Larry in a bar. Paul, age 37, was very much attracted to Larry, age 27, but boyish in appearance, projecting the age of about 21 physically. Paul was very masculine, and Larry was masculine, but in a boyish way. Paul was apprehensive as they entered his home, for he was unable to determine the wants of his new friend, Larry. And Paul definitely knew what he wanted: He always played the masculine role in anal intercourse.

But he followed the patterns of a good host, and the pair enjoyed a night-cap cocktail before retiring to bed. Once in bed, Paul encouraged Larry to remove his underwear, which he had failed to take off before climbing into bed. The two nude bodies joined together in an embrace, and they kissed passionately, longingly. Finally, Paul nudged Larry to lay on his back, and he proceeded to kiss and caress every inch of the boyish body, lingering in the most sensitive areas.

Eventually, Paul's lips found there way to Larry's erect penis, and he began to ravenously suck on it, while at the same time probing the boy's rectum with his fingers. Larry pulled Paul's head away and off of his erection, and Paul returned to lay on top of Larry, where then continued to kiss. During the embrace, Larry began to move his torso back and forth against Paul's, thus establishing that intercourse was his choice. Paul, in response to the signal, nibbled feverishly at Larry's ear lobes, and sucked on the openings of the boy's ears. The action only excited Larry more, and he began to move his torso up and down with more violent motions, and at the same time, positioned Paul's erection be tween his legs, directed toward his rectum.

It was safe at this point for Paul to assume that he had, in fact, found a partner whose desires were tailored to his own. He promptly sought out the lubricant, kept in the drawer of the nightstand next to the bed, applied the jelly to erection, and Larry automatically rolled over to lay face down, at which time Paul applied the lubricant to his rectum. He then merely faced Larry's small, trim body, kneeling befor his rectum. Larry spread his legs in welcome, and Paul moved forward, slowly inserting the head of his erection into Larry's rectum. He finally lunged forward to complete the sex act.

Larry, as it turned out, was very proficient in the art of anal intercourse, serving as the receiver. His body motions and the ability to manipulate the muscles of his anal opening excited Paul beyond belief. The union was mutually rewarding. Paul and Larry eventually became lovers, observing the homosexual marriage without ceremony, and have remained together for 7 years, totally compatible.

Moral of the foregoing case history is elementary: Seeking out the ideal partner can be tedious at best, but once he is found, as a matter of physical attraction, subsequent love and sex activities should be allowed to just "happen." In the case of Paul and Larry, Paul had a definite preference for playing the male role in anal intercourse for complete sexual satisfaction. Larry was his ideal mate, for he preferred to be the receiver. Paul's caution, while justified proved to be totally unnecessary.

SUMMARY

Variations: The foregoing text reveals the most common practices in homosexual love and sex. There are innumerable variations, of course, restricted only by the ingenuity of the individuals involved.

Some variations will be considered by many as unusual, but it must be remembered that everyone has his own likes and dislikes.

For example, some prefer to embark on a sexual union

Some prefer that their love partner be fully clothed at the outset of the sexual union, slowly undressing as activities progress.

while both members are fully clothed. There is a certian fascination to these people in a slow removal of clothing in a somewhat teasing manner. There are those who prefer to be totally nude while their partner is clothed; and, conversely, there are those who want to be dressed and their partner nude.

It is not considered unusual for two individuals, for example, to "make out" fully clothed. In fact, it's very ordinary for a union to begin in this manner, with the pair perhaps seated on a couch or floor. During the period of embraces and kissing, busy hands probe the body beneath the clothing. Eventually, shirts are unbuttoned, belts removed, and zippers pulled down as the hands explore the body inside clothes. Once the pair becomes undressed partially, they usually adjourn to a more comfortable setting, such as a bedroom, where all garments are removed and they continue with the love and sex.

There are some, too, who have a fondness of under garments, aroused and excited at the sight of a male body covered only by shorts or briefs. This preference often dictates that the underwear not be removed entirely, but only slid down enough to expose the genitals. The shorts could thus remain tightly around the thighs during the entire sex act, although in most cases they are usually fully removed eventually. And some gay love-makers will readily admit that they prefer the shorts to remain on, with only the erection exposed through the opening. This explains one's dislike for hair, particularly in his mouth. The arrangement allows full exposure of the penis, and the scrotum can still be massaged through the cotton shorts.

There are on record men who prefer that their sex partner wear certain female garments, such as silk pants, a bra, or even hose. Or, they themselves may prefer to wear such garments while having sex with their partner, himself totally nude. On record is one case in which the individual feels inhibited unless, during periods of sex activity, he is wearing boots, the type referred to as cowboy boots.

Leather has a strong influence on some, be it a leather jacket, a belt, or even a wristband. The presence of leather, it seems, suggests to some a symbol of masculinity and thus further excites them during sexual unions.

Other variations are far reaching. There is the case of young Tod, whose experience is limited. His preference for physical release in a relationship involves having his partner at his side to tell him sex stories while Tod practices self masturbation. The stories excite Tod, and the more detailed they are in descriptions of two other people in a sex union, the more stimulated he becomes.

While it deviates from the norm, activities involving three or more people in sex unions cannot be considered variations, since the actual sex performed relates to that of normal. There is, however, a common favoritism among many toward the orgy concept. The reason is simply, described by a young man during an interview in the following words:

"I like to have sex with another guy, especially if he's attractive; a nice build, good looking, and well equipped. But these guys aren't that easy to find and meet, and I like a lot of sex.

"So I choose to engage in orgies, where there are sometimes as many as ten guys involved. The group I run around with usually has them in an almost dark room. That way, you just strip down and get right into the middle of things. Everyone's nude, so you do what you want, and you can get what you want. Maybe it won't be with a guy you'd go to bed with alone, but you really don't know if the room's dark.

"Usually, you just get right into the middle of all the action. If you want to suck on a cock, you grab one you like and do it. If you want to fuck, you find a nice ass that's available and you go to it. If you want to get sucked, you just roll away from the pile of bodies and lay on your back with an erection standing up in the air. It isn't long before someone's on you and doing it. Or, if you want to get fucked, you just show your ass and let it be known that it is available, and someone will jump on and give it to you.

"Sometimes you don't realize who you've done or who's done you until the lights are on and you can guess... you're not always satisfied, but it doesn't really make any difference after it's all over. Even though you're doing it with people you'd never go to bed with alone, you get a lot of sex that way, all you could ask for."

Some preferences will dictate the use of leather garments; jackets, belts, and the like.

As observed in the interview, the same sex two people enjoy alone is usually practiced in an orgy setting. With three people, of course, there might be more playing around and teasing to enhance the affair, but in larger numbers, the group activity is usually a constant pairing off of bodies to practice fellatio and anal intercourse. And the activity isn't always restricted to pairing off, just two members of the group. It isn't uncommon for one individual to be sucked while he himself is sucking a third person, who, in turn, could very well be getting fucked at the same time.

The three-way is reportedly becoming more and more popular, particularly among lovers who, after a long period of time together, seek diversification in their activities. Involving a third person affords them the opportunity for a new release and variety, yet preserves the home by helping to avoid the necessity for one member of the couple being unfaithful to the other by one or both going out on their own in search for a one-night stand, or trick, "on the side." Even four-ways, involving two couples who are lovers, are steadily growing in popularity, though the activity bridges on a "wife swapping" arrangement or orgy.

Lovers: The ultimate goal among many homosexuals is the selection of a partner who will eventually prove to be "perfect." Sexual compatibility, common interests, few or no personality conflicts, are all the ingredients for a happy "marriage" between two homosexuals.

The love life, or sex life, remains essentially the same, but the opportunities for experimentation are more available and recommended, since it affords a deviation from the norm and thus negates the possibility of being bored with one another. Sex, particularly in a homosexual relationship, is critical. It is imperative that the couple be compatible, and each must strive to satisfy the other in their sexual unions.

There is no denying that total satisfaction in sex will ward off the possibilities of either member of the couple becoming promiscuous and thus unfaithful to his spouse.

Additionally, two lovers have the advantage of being able to talk over any problems that may occur in their sexual relationship. Through discussion, if each is devoted to one another, most problems can be solved or overcome and what otherwise might be a lost relationship is saved.

Love and sex between devoted lovers can be a beautiful and rewarding experience for two people. Under ideal conditions, there is no need for loneliness or lack of sex, and such a relationship can prove rewarding in many other ways. Monetary gains are more readily accomplished by two people working toward a common goal, rather than one; recreational activities can be enjoyed more because they are shared with someone who is loved; and there is a degree of security in knowing that there is someone who cares and is always standing by to help when and if needed.

Diversification/Flexibility: The single gay, one who is not obligated to a lover, will find that tricking with someone new three or four or more times weekly is not uncommon in major cities and other areas where the percentage of the population is heavily homosexual. It is thus important that he prepare himself for a variety of approaches to sex, simply because everyone's preference is slightly different.

It is there fore advised that the individual develop a technique in all areas of homosexual love and sex. He will always be more comfortable if he cruises with a background of experience, confident in the knowledge that he can satisfy his new-found partner no matter the preference in sex. Indeed, he will still maintain his favorite methods of release, but if he does, in fact, hope to satisfy his partner, he should be prepared to do so, no matter the request, with some requests, with some restrictions, of course.

Personal Hygiene: Although there are rare exceptions, no more attractive feature of an individual is his cleanliness and neatness of appearance, no matter the mode of dress. There are some, of course, who are attracted to body odor

Garments of clothing will often arouse a partner in love and sex. Some will show a preference for underwear remaining on, dropped only enough to expose the genital area.

(the familiar "B-O"), but for the most part, individuals prefer another who is clean and well groomed.

This feature indicates that a person not only cares about his own self, but assures the potential partner, at least to a safe degree, that his prospect would not carelessly expose another to, for example, a venereal disease. In fact, if one is inclined to trick frequently with strangers, he would do himself and others a favor by getting a checkup and blood test at regular intervals, either visit his own doctor or the local health department for the service.

Personal hygiene extends beyond the realm of daily bathing and precautions against communicable diseases. In homosexual love, particularly in anal intercourse activity, there are simple methods which are easily and quickly effected. As observed in an earlier chapter, following intercourse the aggressor should urinate and thus "wash out" the urethra. Moreover, the penis should be washed off with soap and warm water, using, if possible, an anti-bacterial liquid soap. The recipient, on the other hand, should douche both before and after anal intercourse, and a special douche cleansing agent should be used.

In summary, homosexual love can and should be a warm, rewarding experience. The objectives of a relationship and sexual union are twofold: That of psychological and physical release for both members of the couple involved. There are no restrictions as to what can be done, nor how it should be done, so long as each participant is satisfied and rewarded in the experience. And, unless one is careless in his selection of a partner, there is no reason for not being rewarded.

Three ways open the door to a variety of positions and activity, will sometimes result in teasing and playing prior to actual sex union.
